About artGroupie

artGroupie, a recurring exhibition of art works by musicians, producers and DJs returns for its 4th instalment featuring an all-women line-up. Works include oil paintings, photography and other visual art by talented creatives whose far-reaching music output will be familiar to many. Amongst those taking part in this year's exhibition are Lissa Barnum (The Vitabeats), Jodi Phillis (The Clouds), Claire Nakazawa (Haiku Hands), Alannah Russack (Hummingbirds/Aerial Maps), Linda Janssen (Wicked Beat Sound System/Bellydance), Chantel Bann (Shanghai), Zoe Carides, Christie Torrington (DJ Milky Tea), Wicked Bandit, Bea Pierce, Hiske Weijers, audio/visual composer and performer Mary Mainbridge, Georgie Groovescooter and guitarist/sound-technician-turned-oil-painter Bridie O'Brien whose music career includes being part of the 2019 all-female reincarnation of iconic Australian band Do-Ré-Mi.

Hone Heke was the charismatic Ngapuhi warrior who was gravely insulted when after signing the 'Treaty of Waitangi' with the British, and being told that the United Tribes Of New Zealand flag would be flown, the British shifted it to a different flag, the British flag. This started a whole bunch of wars with Heke, who chopped down the flag 4 times, only for it to be reinstated with the British flag. The fourth attack marked the beginning of the Northern Wars which culminated the destruction of Kororareka, now known as Russell, in the Bay of Islands. Whilst the Treaty of Waitangi appeared to be a fair union between the Maori People and the British, it favoured heavily for the Crown, and thus caused much disillusion with the treaty and what it actually meant to the Maori people. The cutting down of the flag was intended to express the displeasure of Hone Heke and to show his formidable warrior skills as they defeated the British troops many a time. However, I like to think that his wife, Hariata, had a hand in it as she appeared by his side many a time. This is the painting I have created to honour Hone Heke and his wife, or assistant, Hariata, and highlight the cheeky disposition they were both known to have. E tūmanako ana ahau kia pirangi koe ki te tiro tiro i nga kōrero a Hone Heke.

Nga mihi.

Wirea Janssen (Linda Janssen).

Praying Donkey Angel / Burro Angelito, Resando

Acrylic on Canvas and Black Sharpie

45 cm x 45 cm

$900

Donkeys are considered many things, and most are untrue. They are loyal and patient and unlike horses, like to be asked, not told to comply. They are also known to ward off danger and don't harm unless threatened. As a black raven rings the alarm, this little angel prays on bended knee that he is able to defend and protect.

My Donkeys Give Light / Mis Burros Dan Luzon Arches

Acrylic on Canvas with Black Sharpie

We own two Donkeys, Marley and Lloyd. Treasured best mates, they are calming, kind, gentle, stoic, sensitive, playful and stubborn. They ward off snakes and foxes. They are beloved pets, not beasts of burden - albeit they appear to carry (their own...) The sound of their bray breaks hearts.

Protect Me / Proteje Me

Acrylic on Canvas with Black Sharpie

62 cm x 28 cm

$800

During the fires as I was pulling clothes off the line, a diamond python raised its head out of the gutter. As an endangered species, here I show him wrapping himself around me to protect (me). His name is naturally, Monty.
